MAP OF PRECIOUS

Gold and Jewels Framed in Costly Colored Jasper. For France.

Composed Entirely of Siberian Gold and Ural Russian Gems.

The annals of international courtesie contain no more curious episode than that relating to imperial Russia's graceful present to her friend and ally France. It took the form of a map alleged that the husband had struck his forty inches square composed entirely wife with his hairbrush, and the jury of gold and precious stones framed in was asked to look at the head. slate colored jasper. It is exhibited today in the Louvre-an imperishable chart of fair France, impervious alike to moth and rust, the symbol of a na-tion that will "live for ever," as the Oriental toast puts it. It is exhibited in the great gallery inclosed in a superb walnut case that stands eight feet high. Much pains was taken to ascertain the history of this most wonderful trophy history of this most wonderful trophy gift. I use the word "trophy" because the gold is all Siberian, and every gem that stars the map came from the imperial Bussian mines in the Urais. The map was designed with the personal approval of the Czar by the famous Russian Engineer De Mostovinko, who superintended its production and completion throughout. It was put together at the imperial factory of Ekaterinburg, and nearly eight months were occupied in this process alone. The Czar was so delighted with the map when it was completed that he personally congratulated De Mostovinko and presented him with a decoration in honor of his achievement.

Asiatic Russia was ransacked for the necessary material, some of the gems being found omy in mines appropriated by the demperor and never found in commerce at all. The jasper used is some of the most beautifully veined that has ever been produced, while the polishing is a marvel to behold. So exquisitely do the lines of each section meet that they are invisible to the naked eye.

pelishing is a marvel to behold. So exquisitely do the lines of each section meet that they are invisible to the naked eye.

No fewer than 106 of the more important towns of France are given, their names being wrought in letters of pure gold, while the towns themselves are represented by a ruby of cnormous size and value, which lapidaries of Europe. Havre boasts a superbe emerald under its golden name; Rouen is represented by a sapphire; Lille by a phenacite, a rare variety of rock crystal; Rheims by a chrysolite; Lyons by a tourmalin; Nantes by a beryl; Bordeaux by an aquamarine; Marseilles by an emerald; Nice by a garnet; Cherbourg by an alexandrite from the Urals (it looks green by day and reddish blue by artificial light). Twenty-one other towns are represented by amethysts, thirty-five by tourmalins, and thirty-eight by quartz crystals. And the rivers of France in this extraordinary map are represented by sinuous bars of precious platinum sunk in the jasper. The courses of the rivers had first to be cut in the levely stone and the platinum laid in afterward and the polished.
